Schools of the Future: Strategy & Design:

How will the classrooms and schools of the future be different or similar to classrooms and schools in the present? At a year-long series of Strategy and Design (S&D) town hall meetings at independent schools around the U.S., NAIS’s president, Pat Bassett, has accumulated a large data base of information that is helpful to teachers and school leaders as they attempt to plan for their schools and classrooms in the future. He offers a framework for schools of the future, composed of four essential questions that schools must address to remain viable and successful. His talk concludes with an extremely interesting list of the..... “21 Things that Will Be Obsolete in Education by 2020!”

Patrick F. Bassett

Bassett began his career in independent schools in 1970 as an English teacher and lacrosse coach at Woodberry Forrest School (Virginia), an all boys boarding school. In 1980, he became headmaster of an all-girls school, Stuart Hall (Virginia), where he remained until 1989. From 1981 to 1989, Bassett served on the Executive Committee of the Virginia Association of Independent Schools (VAIS), and he was president from 1988-1989. From 1985 to 1989, he served on the board of directors of the National Association of Independent Schools (NAIS). He was named a Kellogg National Leadership Fellow from 1986-1989. Bassett became the head of Pomfret School (Connecticut), a coed, boarding-day high school, in 1989.

From 1993 to 2001, Bassett was the president of the Independent Schools Association of the Central States (ISACS). He also served on the board of directors of The Multicultural Alliance (1994-2000), on the board of The Council for Spiritual and Ethical Education (CSEE) since 1996, and on the board and Executive Committee of CAPE, the Council for American Private Education, since 2001. In addition, he joined the Advisory Board of The Klingenstein Center, Teachers College, and Columbia University in 2001. He is the author of numerous book chapters and articles.

Bassett currently serves as the President of the National Association of Independent Schools (NAIS), a position he has held since 2001.
